

CALGARY -20°

A few clouds
Detailed Forecast

Start Home Delivery | Subscriber Services | Digital Edition | iPad App

Log in | canada.com NETWORK

CALGARY HERALD

PROUDLY CALGARY SINCE 1883

Heritage Classic:
Great hockey,
great outdoors
Special section.

Quick Links: Shopping, Obituaries, Horoscopes

Find a business or person on:

Home News Opinion Business Sports Entertainment Life Technology Travel Topics Jobs Cars Homes

Classifieds

Hibernating bears could help victims of trauma

BY KERRY SHERIDAN, AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE FEBRUARY 18, 2011

Hibernating bears are loud snorers. They go many months without food, even sustaining pregnancies in their winter slumber. A sudden noise may rouse them, briefly, but they barely budge otherwise. So it might come as a surprise that scientists are studying how the bears' bodies work during hibernation to help doctors rescue people in trauma situations.

"Hibernating bears function pretty much like a closed system, all they need is air," said Brian Barnes of the Institute of Arctic Biology at the University of Alaska Fairbanks.

By studying the bears' mastery of lowering their metabolic rate for five to seven months, researchers hope to find clues for saving the lives of people who suffer major medical traumas, such as heart attack or stroke.

Such traumas create "a problem of supply and demand. Your supply of oxygenated blood to your brain is quickly lowered but the demand stays high and you have to get to a hospital very quickly," Barnes said.

"If we can uncover the way that hibernators turn down that metabolic demand . . . then one could imagine a therapy where you would -in somebody who is stricken -lower the metabolic demand to match that reduced supply," he said.

That way, a victim could be placed in a "state of equilibrium," Barnes said.

"We like to say we could extend the golden hour -during which if you reach advanced medical care outcomes are better -to a golden day or a golden week. Certainly that is what these animals display."

Barnes and his research team, led by IAB researcher Oivind Toien, recently published a study on hibernating bears in the journal Science, and found the animals' metabolic rate dips lower than previously thought, slowing by 75 per cent.

However, the bears' body temperature only fell five to six degrees Celsius, and one bear that was pregnant during hibernation maintained nearly the same body temperature throughout her winter sleep.

STORY TOOLS

E-mail this Article

Print this Article

Share this Article

Font: A A A A

RELATED TOPICS

- Brian Barnes
- Institute of Arctic Biology
- Nature and the Environment

MOST POPULAR NEWS

MOST READ | E-MAILED | COMMENTED

- Major retail/commercial development proposed for Canada Olympic Park
- Couple shaken after stray shot pierces three homes
- Opinion: Entry fee to U.S. should never fly
- Pair of Zamboni thieves put on ice
- Calgary region house sales and prices to rise in 2011: CMHC
- Robbers posing as police officers invade northeast Calgary home

more >>

PHOTO PICKS

Sports
funniest faces,

The study included five American black bears captured by the Alaska Department of Fish and Game because they were a nuisance to human populations.

Bears breathe one to two times per minute and their heart rate slows dramatically during hibernation, said Toien.

"Sometimes there is as much as 20 seconds between beats," he said.

Bears also lost hardly any bone mass and only small amounts of muscle during hibernation.

© Copyright (c) The Calgary Herald

E-mail this Article Print this Article Share this Article

falls and follies

We know playing...

ENVIRONMENT

African sanctuary fights to save threatened elephant population

A slowdown in...

Prince

William then and now

Prince William...

GALLERIES »

12 tourists asleep when Vietnamese boat sinks

A tourist boat...

Celebs take in fantasy fashion during The Blonds Fall 2011 fashion show

Celebrities ...

Costumed revlers take to streets of Granada during Poetry Carnival

Nicaraguans ...

More photos »

CALGARY HERALD HEADLINE NEWS

Sign up to receive daily headline news from the Calgary Herald.

SUBMIT

Our Privacy Statement